

Generations was a six-month project which took place at Delancey Hospital. Writer-in-residence, Sue Mayfield, worked with musicians, Jaye Woodfield and Marie-France Riboulet, to evoke stories and memories from patients at Delancey. Sue then retold these using poetry and prose, and the resulting book, Real as Yesterday..., is full of inspiration and humanity.

Real as Yesterday...

“This book, and the residency that gave it life, is a reminder of the beauty music and story give to all our lives, and of the importance of other people listening to our stories and giving them value.”

Alan Hatton-Yeo, Director of Beth Johnson Foundation

“I am sure everyone will be moved by the memories, stories and poems in this book. I also hope that, as well as the memories of the stories and poems themselves, people will be reminded of the importance of person-centred care and the need for dignity in care for older people – key priorities within the National Service Framework for Older People.”

Professor Ian Philp, National Director for Older People, Department of Health

Cost £4.95 (plus £1 post & packaging per copy)

All proceeds from the sale of Real as Yesterday... will go to Arts in Trust, the ongoing arts programme at Gloucestershire Hospital NHS Foundation Trust
Registered Charity No. 1051606

✂-----

To order a copy please complete the form below & return to: Katherine Mann
Music Co-ordinator
Arts in Trust
c/o Willis Newson
20 Portland Square
Bristol
BS2 8SJ

(Copies are also being stocked by the shop at Cheltenham Art Gallery and Museum, and by Courtyard Books in Bishop's Cleeve)

No of Copies	Title	Price	P&P	Total Cost
-----	Real as Yesterday...	-----	-----	-----

Name _____ Organisation Name _____ Job Title _____

Address _____

Tel _____ Email _____

I enclose a cheque payable to "Willis Newson" Date _____

We would like to add you to our e-newsletter mailing list so that we can inform you about future projects. If you would prefer not to receive this please tick here.